He said Cavello had left the matter for him to take care of. He had received three letters from Cavello asking him to send him records of the case in order that he might show the authorities in Italy that he had not received a cent of the money, as he had been brought to justice by the Arena heirs.

Mr. Fennelon was recalled and he said that Cavello had an argument with Mr. Fallon. Cavello said that his agreement was that Fallon was to have half the sum received and was to pay all of the expenses of his cases from his half and that Mr. Fallon denied this saying that one half was to go to him and the expenses were to be paid out of the other half.

Attorney Fallon took the stand. He said that he had not wanted to take the case when Cavello came to him as there was no legal basis he could see upon which to bring suit. Others urged him to take the case, but all they knew was the date when Arena had been killed and the place. They had no money and finally they offered him half. Finally he wrote a letter to Cabot & Daly, not knowing whether Arena worked for them or not, but knowing he had worked for them in this city. He informed the firm from an insurance company in which Cabot & Daly insured its employes. The letter said the employers were in no way responsible.

Cavello wanted him to go to Canton and look up the case. Fallon said he told Cavello that there would not be enough money to pay so much ex-pense as it would cost $25 a day and expenses if he went to Pennsylvania. Finally Cavello got Farese to go with him to Pennsylvania and Farese came back with the statements of four wit-

He said that Gould had objected to Farese getting so much money and he had told Mr. Gould that he had included $300 as his fee in the final settlement, but that he had done so because of his agreement. He thought it was not in apportion to the estate and that he intended to see that Arena's mother set $100 mother got $100. Mr. Canfield asked Mr. Fallon if he

Fallon retorted: "I turned it over like I turned the $1,300 fee that I turned over to a client that got $4,000 from one of your clients—from which time all of our troubles date—as it was at the time I was at the state of the s that time I had to reprimand you for unprofessional conduct, Mr. Canfield."
"That is all false let us have no more of such talk as that," replied Mr.

Canfield.

Mr. Fallon continued by saying the reason Judge Nobbs did not hear the case was that he had heard Cavello say in conversation with him that he would pay Fallon one-half of all he received as damages in the Arena case. He said that Attorney Gould had appealed the case, but it had never been brought to trial. About two months ago he said Attorney L. M. Petrucelli, son-in-law of Consul Riccio of the son-in-law of Consul Riccio of the Italian government, had come to him and asked to make a settlement of the Arena case. He said he had paid him $150. Asked if Petrucelli was empowered to take the money Fallon said that he would take Mr. Petrucelli's that he would take Mr. Petrucelli's word as quickly as he would Mr. Can-field's.
